

CLASSROOM LITERATURE

An integral part of the Odyssey Charter School charter is offering students a classical education. The major component of a classical education is literature.

1. All literature read in classrooms K-8, whether read by students or read aloud by teachers, is to be from what is generally understood as classical literature (definition and examples follow).
2. Classics read at each grade level must be appropriate to the age of the students, even when student reading ability is above grade level.
3. The minimum expectation for all classes, 1-5, and language arts classes in the middle school, is that students will read at least two classic novels each semester.
4. Teachers in all classes should be discussing the following terms in connection with literature. This will necessarily be adjusted to the age level of the students. All students should be familiar with each of these terms by sixth grade.

plot	assonance	mood	lexicon
character	simile	language	genre
theme	metaphor	point of view	drama
character	extended metaphor	paradigm	comedy characterization	symbolism	allegory	satire
flat, round characters	fiction	fable	irony setting	nonfiction	legend	humor dialogue	poetry	tall tale	epic flashback	prose	myth	tragedy
foreshadowing	narrative	parable	catharsis
protagonist	description	didactic	tragic flaw
antagonist	exposition	moral	nemesis conflict	narrative hook	short story	lyric biography	rising action	novel	ballad autobiography	complication	play	play on words figurative language	turning point	essay	double entendre alliteration	climax	atmosphere	paradox allusion	denouement	empathy	pathos imagery	resolution	sympathy	personification onomatopoeia	falling action	romanticism	willing suspension of hyperbole	style	realism	disbelief dissonance	tone	naturalism

5. Any title not included on the following lists must be approved by the Curriculum Coordinator before purchase or use in the classroom.

6. There are many examples of literature, that although not considered classics, are valuable. However, in order to more closely follow the charter, we will focus on the classics. If teachers have favorite titles that are not classics, they could possibly be added to the list of recommended titles for monthly book reports, after being approved by the Curriculum Coordinator.

7. Classic novels not being studied as a class should form the bulk of the recommended titles list for book reports at each grade level.

Classic Literature

- A classic usually expresses some artistic quality—an expression of life, truth, and beauty.
- A classic stands the test of time. The work is usually considered to be a representation of the period in which it was written; and the work merits lasting recognition. In other words, if the book was published in the recent past, the work is not a classic.
- A classic has a certain universal appeal. Great works of literature touch us to our very core beings—partly because they integrate themes that are understood by readers from a wide range of backgrounds and levels of experience. Themes of love, hate, death, life, and faith touch upon some of our most basic emotional responses.
- A classic makes connections. You can study a classic and discover influences from other writers and other great works of literature. Of course, this is partly related to the universal appeal of a classic. But, the classic also is informed by the history of ideas and literature—whether unconsciously or specifically worked into the plot of the text.

Below is a list of books generally considered to be classics in English literature, divided into categories of classic literature appropriate for adults, teenagers and children. All are originally published before 1960, and are recognized by many of the most respected public and private schools throughout the United States and abroad. These books have entertained and educated young and old for generations, and offer insight into the most basic tools and tenets of Western civilization, often revealing essential truths about human nature.
